Winding Down the issues...

The last two ballot issues I'll cover are the Pueblo City Schools Bond issue and mill levy increase.

I'm sure that some of you figure I'll give a glowing endorsement for these two issues based on my past columns and my role on the strategic planning committee. Well, the reality of this is that I have had to give these issues a great deal of thought to come to my answer. In context, this was a lot easier to tackle a year ago before we've gotten into this economic mess.

So what do these two initiatives do for you and the schools? The bond issue, in a nutshell, provides air conditioning for all the schools in the district. Okay, the Pueblo Chieftain gave this a no because, paraphrasing, it was a lot of money to pay for eight additional school days per year. The Strategic Planners wanted to increase the number of school days by over 30 days per year. In truth, I wasn't (and remain unconvinced) a fan of this but I do favor an extra 10-15 days per year. The problem of course is that it is ridiculously hot once we get to the middle of June. But the end of August and early September is no bargain either when it comes to temperature. Anyone who has attended an orientation in the first few weeks of school knows how hot the classrooms are even in the evening. So, it was very shortsighted of the Chieftain to only look at an eight day period. The reality is that adding air conditioning to the schools will add many more days of effective learning for our kids since we won't have to discount three or four weeks at the start and end of the school year.

Obviously this costs a lot of money and we the people will be the ones paying it back. The bond market today isn't very favorable but this project will take a while before the bonds are sold so that is anyone's guess. Inflation, which I'll touch on a prediction next week, is probably going to come in close to the bond rate, at least for the first few years. No doubt the cost of the waiting will be greater.

The second issue asks for a mill levy increase that will pay for the above mentioned bond, pay for the increased utility and payroll costs, lengthen the school day, restore arts and music programs that were killed when we ran out of money, and improve funding to attract and retain good teachers. All of these items are straight out of the strategic plan. A longer school day will keep kids occupied and certainly increase our success rate. There's a ton of research on the subject so you can look it up yourself. There's an equal amount of research out there on how much better schools with art and music programs do compared to those without. Retaining good teachers with our current pay scale setup is a problem as well.

Then again...

There is the fact that October 2008 is vastly different than 2007. I'm feeling the pinch as much, if not more, than many of you are. Do I want to commit to higher taxes? In perspective, it's going to cost me about $3.00 per week in added taxes. When I think of it in those terms and when I consider my commitment to Pueblo improving its education, I am going to wholeheartedly support these measures. It's too much of a chance to improve our kids' chances.

But School Board be warned: Any misuse of these moneys will result in my wrath; I'm supporting this on the narrow definition it was presented on.

Next week is my 'lightning round' of my election picks, including national and local races ... and I'll probably be as controversial as Mad Money's Jim Kramer.

Have a Great Pueblo Week!

Earth Talk ... Q&A

From the Editors of E/The Environmental Magazine

DEAR EARTHTALK: Is using nitrogen to inflate my car's tires really better for the environment than using air? And if so, how?

—Roger Mawdsley, Abbotsville, BC

Whether or not it makes environmental sense to inflate car tires with nitrogen instead of air is a matter of much debate. Proponents of nitrogen say the element is a smart choice for the environment primarily because it leaks from tires at a slower rate than air, so tires stay inflated longer at full capacity, which helps a vehicle attain maximum fuel efficiency, i.e. better gas mileage. According to the Get Nitrogen Institute, a Denver-based non-profit which advocates for replacing the air in our tires with nitrogen, under-inflated tires inadvertently are a big contributor to global warming as they cause drivers to waste fuel.

Although auto experts recommend checking your car's tire pressure weekly, studies show that the majority of drivers rarely if ever check to see if their tires are properly inflated and usually only add air when a tire is visibly low or beginning to go flat. A recent study by the European division of tire maker Bridgestone found that 93.5 percent of cars in Europe have under-inflated tires, wasting some 2.14 billion gallons of high-priced, polluting fuel every year. Analysts believe that a similar percentage of North Americans are driving around on under-inflated tires as well.

While properly inflated tires certainly promote better fuel efficiency and are thus good for the environment, not everyone is convinced that filling tires with nitrogen instead of plain ol' air makes a difference. Terry Jackson, who writes the influential "Driving for Dollars" column for the Bankrate.com website, points out that air is composed primarily of, you guessed it, nitrogen; some 78 percent of the regular air you put in your tires is nitrogen, with oxygen making up most of the remainder. "So going to pure nitrogen only squeezes out a small amount of the oxygen molecules that nitrogen proponents argue are so detrimental," relates Jackson.

Nitrogen proponents may quibble that it's the oxygen in the mix that causes problems, though, as oxidation can start to degrade the rubber inside tires while corroding the interior of the wheels as well. But Jackson counters that tires and wheels will have been long worn out on the outside before any oxygen-induced interior damage causes them to come apart. Also, he adds that a lot of the leakage from tires happens because the wheel and the tire do not line up perfectly, and air (or nitrogen) escapes accordingly.

Another factor, of course, is cost. Nitrogen-equipped service centers will fill up your tires with nitrogen for something like $10 per tire, which is a far cry from the couple of quarters (if even that) it takes to trigger the air machine at your local gas station. "When it comes down to a dollar decision, it's hard to argue that spending as much as $40 for nitrogen in a set of tires is a good fiscal move," writes Jackson.

"Save your money and just keep an eye on your tire pressures," he concludes.

DEAR EARTHTALK: Backyard fire pits have become the latest must-have gardening feature. How bad are they on the environment?

—Michael O'Laughlin, Tigard, OR

With Fall setting in and the mercury starting to drop, many of us want to extend our time outdoors, and sitting around a backyard fire pit has become one of the most popular means to do so. But even though it may be fun—s'mores anyone?—it is not good for the environment, especially during times when air quality is already poor.

It's hard to assess the larger impact of backyard fire pits on local or regional air quality, but no one questions the fact that breathing in wood smoke can be irritating if not downright harmful. According to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), so-called fine particles (also called particulate matter) are the most dangerous components of wood smoke from a health perspective, as they "can get into your eyes and respiratory system, where they can cause health problems such as burning eyes, runny nose and illnesses such as bronchitis."

Fine particles also aggravate chronic heart and lung diseases, and have been linked to premature deaths in those already suffering from such afflictions. As such, the EPA advises that anyone with congestive heart failure, angina, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, emphysema or asthma should steer clear of wood smoke in general. Children's exposure to wood smoke should also be limited, as their respiratory systems are still developing and they breathe more air (and air pollution) per pound of body weight than adults.

Geography and topography play a role in how harmful wood smoke can be on a community-wide level. People living in deep, steep-walled valleys where air tends to stagnate should be careful not to light backyard fires during smog alerts or other times when air quality is already poor. Lingering smoke can be an issue even in wide-open areas, especially in winter when temperature inversions limit the flow of air.

The Washington State Department of Ecology reports that about 10 percent of the wintertime air pollution statewide can be attributed to fine particles from wood smoke coming out of wood burning stoves. While a wood stove may be a necessary evil as a source of interior heat, there is no excuse for lighting up a backyard fire pit during times when you could be creating health issues for your neighbors.

Another potential risk to using a backyard fire pit is sparking a forest fire. Some communities that are surrounded by forestland voluntarily institute seasonal burn bans so that residents won't inadvertently start a forest fire while they are out enjoying their backyard fire pits. If you live in one of these areas, you probably already know it and would be well advised to follow the rules.

If you must light that backyard fire pit, take some precautions to limit your friends' and family's exposure to wood smoke. The Maine Bureau of Air Quality recommends using only seasoned firewood and burning it in a way that promotes complete combustion—small, hot fires are better than large smoldering ones—to minimize the amount of harmful smoke. The moral of the story: If you need to burn, burn responsibly.

PERSPECTIVE by Jon Heaton, Tribune editor

Good-bye, old Bushy buddy...

The time is near for bidding Georgie farewell. As his tenure winds down, we are reminded of the many things he taught us.

First, we now are aware that the teachings of Jesus are not a very compelling guide for a leader when he is faced with a national emergency. Given the choice of following his religious hero or killing tens of thousands of humans, George chose the killing. You've got to feel for a guy who can personify such flawed convictions.

Second, he showed us that the members of a political party which has preached small government for at least half a century will blindly reelect a leader who makes no effort to do so, as long as he never admits it. Ronald Reagan actually increased budget deficits every year he was in office, yet his fellow Republicans were steadfast in their praise and support of him. George Herbert Walker Bush lost their support because he told the truth when he said, "No NEW taxes," but then compromised with the Congress on some tax increases. The Republicans were incensed when Bill Clinton lied about his personal infidelity, which cost the taxpayers nothing and posed no risk to national security. But when Georgie came on the scene, his party faithful couldn't wait to reelect him after he expanded each budget while cutting taxes for his crooked cronies on Wall Street.

Georgie was rewarded by most Republicans for increasing the debt burden on their children and grandchildren while giving the fatcats a free pass. He did, however, minimize federal government payroll expansion by contracting out countless public responsibilities to private firms which had neither adequate expertise nor loyalty to the American people whom they were hired to serve. Hundreds of contractors showed up in Washington to lap up the no-bid, non-competitive contracts being handed out by the Bushy Gang, thus depriving federal agencies of the manpower and budget dollars to faithfully perform their intended functions.

Examples of the result included an EPA and an OSHA which would not enforce regulations; a Dept. of Interior which would not protect our wildlife, our forests, or our natural resources; a FEMA which could not manage emergencies; a Defense Department wanting in the expertise and manpower to fight one small war, although its own mandate had previously been to be capable of fighting two regional wars simultaneously.

Yes, Georgie taught us how to starve and strangle a government by running up historic deficits to pay off his carpetbagging contractors while rewarding fatcat cronies with tax cuts. Selling out our government agencies was the natural climax to 25 years of trickle-down tax scams coupled with profligate spending. History may call it the Great Conservative Sellout.

Which reminds us that Georgie taught us how to win an election in the Supreme Court when Florida ballot-box stuffing and voter suppression tactics weren't enough. Everything else we owe to Georgie flows from that Supreme Court atrocity in November 2000.

In the spirit of Reagan, Bushy has taught us how to put trillions of dollars into the pockets of multinational hydrocarbon companies such as Exxon, just by encouraging the superstitious and the ignorant to mistrust 99 percent of the world's climate scientists. It is a matter of record that Exxon paid pseudoscientists to head up phony organizations opposed to prevalent theories of climate change. Exxon is also behind the phony pipe dream of sequestering CO₂ underground. Calling it "clean coal," Exxon is pushing this boondoggle as if it were a viable alternative to today's CO₂ mess from burning coal for power generation. By Exxon's own admission, sequestration has yet to be tried even as a pilot test and its deployment in perhaps 30 years may not even then be competitive.

Bushy coddled big oil for eight years, squandering America's energy future. With his rubber-stamp Congress, and then with his veto, he freed big business to run our economy into the ground.

A handful of Trib readers suspect that I secretly admire Bushy. Well, who wouldn't admire a guy who, almost single-handedly, has enhanced and exposed every dogmatic quirk of the U.S. Conservative movement, including those of the Republican radical fringe?

What's left is too split, too narrow, too paranoid, and too occult even for Georgie. No wonder, then, that John McCain is struggling. When John reaches out to the GOP radical base, he insults intelligent independent voters as well as moderate Republicans. For this our admiration goes out to Bushy.

Price-padding adds up...

If the next administration is to deal effectively with our national healthcare disgrace, that industry's crooked fatcats must be brought to heel. And if the new Congress continues to green light every excess profits scheme put forward by the healthcare sector, there is no chance for market forces to check rampant cost increases.

Each year, healthcare and healthcare insurance prices are pumped up some 15 to 20 percent. Over the years, these prices have gobbled up a huge chunk of household income while often failing to provide for catastrophic situations.

How much pay would you earn after 10 years if your pay grew by 15 percent every year? The answer: four times as much (405 percent). Example: If your gross income from full-time employment was $25,000 in 1999, it would be about $101,000 for this year.

If it grew at the rate of 18 percent annually, that $25,000 in 1999 would now bring you $131,000.

At 20 percent annual growth, you could be making $100,000 this year even if your total pay for 1999 had been just $16,000!

If only you could get a monopoly or patent on your occupation. jfh

Economists outline financial crisis, effects, Oct 30 at Otero JC

OJC 10/20 — Otero Junior College will be sponsoring a seminar on Thursday, October 30 at 7 p.m. to help the public and agriculture producers better understand the current financial crisis that is affecting Wall Street, financial institutions, and agriculture commodity prices. The public seminar will be held in OJC's Student Center Banquet room and is free of charge.

Two local economists, Dr. Abbas Mirakhor, recently retired Dean of the Executive Board of the International Monetary Fund, and Dr. Walter "Mack" Myers, OJC Agri-Business faculty member, will present their insight into the current issues and answer questions from the audience about the economic future for the financial and agriculture markets.

Dr. Abbas Mirakhor is a 1963 graduate of Otero Junior College. He went on to Kansas State University where he received a bachelor's, masters, and PhD degrees in economics. For the first 16 years of his career he worked as a professor of economics at the University of Alabama, Alabama A&M, and Florida Institute of Economics. In 1984 he joined the International Monetary Fund in Washington DC as an economist. He has spent the past 24 years with the International Monetary Fund, serving as the organization's Executive Director and Dean of the Executive Board, retiring in January of this year.

Dr. Mirakhor will be giving an overview of the current economic situation. He will share his insight on how national and international economies work, and what caused the current financial system to become unstable. "The principles of economics are common sense," said Mirakhor. "It is a very simple subject when you understand that all economics is personal, just as all politics is local."

Dr. Walter "Mack" Myers graduated from Bent County High School and holds a PhD in agriculture economics from Oklahoma State University. Prior to coming to OJC in 2003 as an Agri-Business Management faculty member, he was Vice President for Connell Commodities, an agricultural commodity think tank in New Jersey, and Vice President of Purchasing and Procurement for Swift & Company in Chicago. Myers has been an independent trader on the Chicago Board of Trade and the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Dr. Myers will provide a visual illustration of how the U.S. financial systems work, starting with the Executive and Legislative branches of government on down to Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and commercial banks. Myers will also be speaking about the impact the financial markets have had on the agriculture commodities markets and what needs to be done to solve the problems for both the financial and agriculture markets.

At the conclusion of their presentations, Mirakhor and Myers will be available to answer questions from the audience.

The informational seminar will begin at 7 p.m. in the Student Center Banquet Room on the Otero Junior College campus. There is no admission charge.
