State green group: clean energy is foundation of America's economic future

EnvirColo 11/11 – As President Elect Obama and a new Congress prepare to meet today's economic and environment challenges, Environment Colorado released a report that lays out a blueprint for how the U.S. can power America for the 21st Century, protecting its environment while revitalizing its economy. "President Elect Obama carried Colorado and now it's time to make sure that he carries the new energy economy with him," said Keith Hay, energy advocate at Environment Colorado. "With a new president and clean energy Congress, Coloradans will be looking for more energy savings, new green jobs, and environmental benefits from a national investment in wind and solar power." The Environment Colorado report makes the case that America has enough renewable potential to power the country several times over, providing the following examples:

- The space available on America's rooftops alone could host enough solar panels to provide meet about 70 percent of our current electricity needs.
- Concentrating solar power, also known as solar thermal power, on just 9 percent of the land area of Nevada could produce enough electricity to power the entire United States.

- The wind blowing over just five U.S. states – North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, Montana and Texas – could produce enough electricity to power the entire United States.
- America's Atlantic, Pacific and Great Lakes coastlines could host enough wind turbines to nearly match the capacity of all of America's current electricity generators combined.
- Geothermal energy, heat from below the earth's surface, has the potential to meet about half the total electricity production capacity in the United States today. The group also points out that energy efficiency is one of America's largest untapped energy sources.

By adopting energy efficiency measures that pay for themselves in energy savings, homes, businesses and factories can cut their energy use by at least a fourth, says the report. The complete report can be found at: <http://www.environmentcolorado.org/reports/energy/energy-program-reports/renewing-america-a-blueprint-for-economic-recovery>
