State health officials and professionals preparing for possibility of Ebola case

ColHealth 10/15) - "It is not possible to predict whether there will be an Ebola case in Colorado. It is necessary to be prepared," said Dr. Larry Wolk, executive director and chief medical officer at the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment.

The state health department reports that it—in collaboration with the Colorado Hospital Association, the Colorado Medical Society, the Colorado Nurses Association and the Colorado Association of Local Public Health Officials—continues to refine state-wide plans for responding to a possible case of Ebola, and to assist hospitals, health care providers and first responders in their preparations.

Preparations include educating health care staff and practicing scenarios about caring for patients with Ebola, including use of personal protective equipment, triage of suspected patients, logistics of providing ongoing care, and appropriate control procedures for hazardous material handling and disposal.

"Colorado hospitals are working to protect the health and safety of patients and their families, health care workers and local communities in light of the national threat posed by Ebola," according to Steven J. Summer, president and CEO of the Colorado Hospital Association.

While these groups represent the majority of hospitals, physicians, nurses and public health agencies in the state, the department states it also is working closely with its many other health partners to ensure accurate and evidence-based information is relied upon at any point that a potential patient may access the health care system.

"By working closely with all of our health care partners, we are helping to ensure Colorado's preparedness for any potential Ebola virus exposures. Indeed, it is by coordinating efforts throughout the health care system that Colorado best can prepare," said Dr. Tamaan Osbourne-Roberts, president of the Colorado Medical Society.

Dr. Colleen Casper, executive director of the Colorado Nurses Association, said her association is working diligently with its health care partners in Colorado and with the CDC to ensure the state's hospitals and health care workers are engaged in evidence-based, comprehensive education and preparedness.

Lisa VanRaemdonck, executive director of Colorado Association of Local Public Health Officials, said that every local public health agency in Colorado has expertise in planning for, training on, and responding to emergencies, especially communicable disease outbreaks.

On Friday, Oct. 10, the department hosted a conference call providing the latest information and guidance about Ebola preparations. Nearly 400 health care professionals from around the state participated in the call. The department is planning weekly calls to provide health care workers with the latest updates from U.S. Centers
