State Health releases annual health care facility infection report

ColoHealth 1/21) - The ninth annual Health Care Associated Infections Disclosure report, recently published by the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment, shows mixed results on infection rates in Colorado health care facilities:

- For the past three years, statewide infection rates for colon surgeries, hip replacements and abdominal hysterectomies performed in hospitals were better than national averages.

- For the past three years, statewide infection rates for breast surgeries performed in hospitals were worse than the national average.

- For the past three years, statewide infection rates for hernia repairs in ambulatory surgery centers were better than the national average.

- In the past two years, long-term acute care hospitals showed lower rates of central line-associated bloodstream infections compared to the national average.

- The statewide rate of central line-associated bloodstream infections in neonatal critical care units was worse than the national average.

- The statewide rate for Clostridium difficile in hospitals was worse than the national average.

- More dialysis centers reported zero infections in 2014-15 and fewer reported infection rates worse than the national average.

"Reported infection rates can be influenced by many factors, such as surveillance techniques and patient health, in addition to infection control practices," said Tamara Hoxworth, manager of the Health Facility Infection Surveillance unit at the department. "To reduce infections, we have created an infection prevention unit and are continuing to collaborate with partners such as the Colorado Hospital Association and Telligent, Colorado's health care quality improvement organization, on efforts to reduce health care-associated infections."

Each year, the report shows infection rates in certain types of Colorado health care facilities compared to national standards for selected surgeries and medical procedures. The report compares the incidence of health care-associated infections at Colorado facilities to the national mean and shows whether each facility was the "same," "better" or "worse" than the national standard. The reports provide a general measure of infection prevention, which is one of the factors Coloradans should consider when deciding where to receive health care.

The annual reports are part of comprehensive reform to address health care-associated infections. Thirty-five states, including Colorado, mandate such reporting to create greater transparency between health care facilities and the public. Colorado's legislatively mandated reports contain data, self-reported by each facility, for the following:
